MR. EDITOR:—Will you please to copy the following from the Polygraph. It is a specimen of liberality which reminds me of the speech of the old giant who called after "Pilgrim," as he came out of the Valley of the Shadow of Death. "You'll never reform till more of you are burned."

I also send you a few homely lines of my own, in reply to the same.

Yours, truly,
JOHN BURNAN.

"No Sect in Heaven."

(Vide P. C. Advertiser.)

No sect, Sir, in Heaven! Thank God, that is true. Then I'll stick to the Church, as I hope you will do. For as 'tis in Heaven, so on earth it should be. No sects and no schisms, but all united in unity. Yes, you know, Sir, the Life, and the Truth, and the Way. Let each his disciples call at all times to pray. "As in Heaven, so on earth, may Thy will be done, And grant that Thy children may ever be true." Apostolic descent, Sir, and true faith combined. Are the marks of this Church, by Jesus designed. And he who owns this in his Church, Sir, is safe. 'Neath that martyr-stained banner, the Catholic faith. Though others by bye-ways may stray up to God, Yet the Catholic Christian is sure of his road. He will pray for the Infidel, Heretic, Jew, And if you're a Dissenter, he will pray for you. For he knows that the mercies of Jesus are great, And in answer to prayer He will open the gate. And if, through God's grace, on that far-distant shore, Quaker Penn and John Wesley and Spurgeon and more, Should their embers glow as they're laid in the dust, Of the glorious approach of the Monarch of Light;— As they hear the last summons, and, trembling with dread, Behold the long march of the spirit-land above, Oh! then should they hear the fond accents of love Assign them a place on the right hand above, They'll not flinch to question the colors of dress, Or scruple at white robes or the robes of the King. They'll march on in procession, with palm-branch and crown, And with their triumph, and cast themselves down, All prostrate, before the High Altar Divine. Where the seven golden candlesticks ceaselessly shine. Endless, they'll sing to the Father, and praise Him, And quail the new wine which their Lord will provide. And Oh! 'mid these joys be it granted awhile To recall mortal scenes, the redeemed must smile. As they think of the cold-blooded, puritan crew Which made worship consist in reverent fear, And checked all the joys through the innocent youth With words out of season, which it called then truth.

Polygraph, April 18, 1863.

A Puritan's Response.

An old poet has said, "As I mused the fire burned," but on reading the above, as the fire of indignation burned in me, I mused.

Here's to the health of the bigot, whoever he may be, Who rhymes without reason of the immaculate tee! Who cries, "Down with all sects!" come join the true church, Whose heaven's doors should be shut and you left in the lurch. 'Apostolic succession' is the badge that we wear: Those who have 'not' the badge cannot enter our door. So fall into rank and train in our squad, Or be left to the unwarmed mercies of God. For if in the great harvest God should gather such tares, Twill be set to the credit of our prevalent prayers, Which we offer for 'Infidel, Heretic, Jew,' And even ungodly 'Dissenters' like you.

"But me, why we're free from any defects, We're a holy abode of all the sects; Sanctimonious graces encircle our necks; Salvation flows only through the ditch we have digged: There's no 'do of safety' but the craft we have rigged: Our title's exclusive; through us grace descends; And sanctity flows from our pure finger-ends; There is no worthy worship except with our forms; Our motto—ritual has wonderful charms; Our's is virtue antique, and grace gone to seed; We stand by the Calendar, the Cross and the Creed. Those who pray with the spirit, and using our book, For acceptance with Heaven all vainly shall look. When they sing it is cant, only set to a cantor; When they preach 'tis the rant of a violent rantier. In the 'pulpit' style of some old Covenanter. Alas for Luther and Calvin! for Quaker and Jew! For Wesley and Watts—the whole sectarian crew, If they preach not and pray not as we Catholics do."

We Catholics! pray tell us which ones you mean? There are several sects we may choose between: There's one, sitting each on his separate perch, saying, I only, I am the head of the church: The Patriarch, Prelate, and jolly old Pope, Each pulling his own—there are three ends to the rope. The Greek and the Roman and a small vulgar fraction, Each one is the church—the Simon-peter section. Both the Greek and the Briton, the Roman and Jew, And both by the Pope are left handily stew. He has turned them both out as arch-heretics; so He offers them pardon, on the tip of his toe. Thus says to the Greek, "Just acknowledge my away; Be it mine to command—be it yours to obey. In submission is peace—come, what do you say?" To order he sends his pontifical bull, "Step ye down, ye schismatics, and together we'll pull; Leave that rickety inn which was built and prepared By Saint Henry the eighth—the great British Blue-Beard; Only safe 'neath the shadow of St. Peter's dome, Return to the fold, to the true church come home. There's no half-way house, on the high-road to Rome." With a skeptical grin they listen, as though Each one was much more than he really is to go. Then taking a look at that blessed big toe, Each turns with a shrug, and says, "Pio, No-no!"

Such is "Catholic anarchy"—with three separate heads, Each with his own and Presbyterian heads. Preferring brotherly love, each abuses the other, And to prove his own title, keeps kicking his brother. On shame on the sham—the shallow pretense, That you're doing God's service, while running your fence! Through the Lord's sheepfold, with the Pharisee's prayer, We're all right on this side; they're all wrong over there." On shame on the sham that makes self-conceit The standard of judgment 'twixt the tares and the wheat.

Don't want disputing in the gateway; God waits to welcome all. Ye are doubling with untempered mortar, When ye would mason up the wall. For the poorest and the humblest, Through Christ would enter into sin, Shall be as welcome as the richest; And, cleansed from every sin, Shall sing Glory Hallelujah! And, with a great and mighty shout, Shall drown the murmur of the bigots, Who sought to keep them out.

Leaves from a Tourist's Journal.

HONOLULU, April, 1863.

To the Editor of the Pacific Com'l Advertiser: DEAR SIR:—It may not be uninteresting to many of your readers to give some extracts of what one has seen and heard on a voyage per steamer to the United States. If not objectionable, you are welcome to the following from my journal. Yours, respectfully, PAUL PAY.

"TUESDAY, April 8, 1862.—The Pacific Steam Mail Co.'s vessel Golden Age, arrived at Acapulco this day at 5 1/2 P. M. Took in water, (which was pumped into the tanks of the steamer from an immense water-boat,) also cattle, pigs, poultry, vegetables, &c., for stores; also boxes specie, hides and bales of cotton, for cargo.

Harbor of Acapulco.

The last 70 miles sail before we entered Acapulco we could see a beautiful white sand beach all the way, and behind the same was a large tract of flat country before you come to the mountains. This level plain, as well as the sides of the uplands, is well adapted for cotton growing—in fact, the whole Mexican coast is good for cotton cultivation. The entrance to Acapulco is most romantic, and so well landlocked, that I, although an old traveler, have never seen the like before. I should think the harbor is about two miles broad, and three or four miles long, with deep water mostly around it. At anchor we found a clipper ship discharging coal, at the rate of sixty tons per day, which is as fast as it can be received. There were also two English and two French men-of-war; one of each was an admiral's ship.
Plenty of liberty money was flying about the old Spanish town. It is, in regard to improvements, much the same as it was two or three hundred years ago, and as when the Spanish galleons visited the harbor and took the treasures of the country to Manila.

High Duties and Cotton.

A Spanish firm here is said to import from England upwards of $500,000 per annum. Some foreigners have been successful. They have very high duties and as a matter of course there is a great induc-ment to smuggling. The duty on all cotton goods is five cents per yard. Hats of every kind, $2 each, duty. Iron goods, duty from 6 to 8 cents per pound, according to the description. The barber of the Golden Age has a little assortment of clothing, &c., in his establishment on board the vessel, procured, as a matter of course, in San Francisco. I was quizzing about like another "Paul Pry," and discovered a run of foreign residents buying shirts, hats, &c., and putting them on, instructing the merchant barber "to bring larger sizes next time." It made my fingers quiver with a trade. The quality of the 200 bales of cotton we took in here is said to be superior, and is worth here, clean, in bales, 18 cents per lb.
The produce is 800 to 1000 lbs. to the acre. They purchase from the natives for four cents uncleaned, and it takes about three pounds in the seed state to make one pound of cleaned. The former steamer took to Panama about 600 bales; the freight to New York via Panama, is three cents per pound. A large quantity of hides was taken on board, value here 12 cents per pound. The above freight is forwarded by Brig Line from Aspinwall to New York, which is owned by the Panama Railroad Company. There was also about $80,000 treasure shipped, consisting of silver coin packed in small boxes. This last pays an export duty of 6 per cent; and I know of some more treasure smuggled off, which did not pay export duty.

Some foreigners are settled in the country manufacturing cotton cloth, hats, &c., and have made fortunes. The indolence of the inhabitants is a great drawback to this country, which has a good climate and vast mineral resources, as besides the good cotton lands, it is a splendid country for sugar, coffee, chocolate, &c. The last season the cotton crop has been in a great measure a failure in consequence of the caterpillar, or cotton insect, that has destroyed the plants. They plant again in September, about the end of the rainy season, and gather their cotton harvest in February, March and April. There is a good deal of indignation manifested here in consequence of some notice from the government that all property of every kind in Mexico, will be taxed ten per cent, for the purpose of discharging the national obligations to England and France. The American consul has protested against the measure. He is the agent of the Pacific M. S. Co., who have a large amount of property in the place.

Life in Mexico.

I fear all the yarus in regard to Mexico are true in respect of government, priests, women, indolence, and a thousand and one other evils. The foreign inhabitants of the Sandwich Islands, by comparison, may say, "the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places." Instances of life in Mexico may be interesting, and I will give the two following, which I have received with many others from a passenger from Acapulco, bound to Yanketown from his wife and three children. He informs me he has lived in Mexico three years, and has been employed in putting up cotton mills, water wheels, cotton gins, &c. I feel sure such an institution would be a paying one at the Sandwich Islands. My informant is much such a Yankee genius as Mr. H. employed by the Honolulu Wide Awake Flour Co. He says the people on the Pacific coast are comparatively honest and he has not lost $5 worth of tools or goods, since he has been in the country, although he has left them often lying about when he was not working. On his return to this country he calculated in five years more to be independent for life.

The first instance he gave me was of a Spanish gentleman who resided on the Pacific coast, one of the same for whom he had been to work. He started from his residence to Mexico City, which was about 300 miles distant, and on his return was seized by robbers, placed in chains, and almost starved to death, for the purpose of extorting money from him, as he was known to be wealthy. At last they arranged for his ransom by his giving an order for $10,000 on his friends, which was duly paid, and the merchant was released and returned safely home.

The other instance of cruelty he had received from the best authority in the place. It happened 24 or 25 years ago, and on the very spot, about 120 miles up the coast from Acapulco, where he erected a mill upon an old site, where the former one had been destroyed. The former mill had been occupied by an Englishman, who had succeeded in becoming very wealthy from the manufacture of cotton. It appears there was another mill about 20 miles distant owned by a Mexican general. From some cause or other the General's mill was destroyed by fire and his jealousy led him to believe that the Englishman was the true author of the destruction of his property. In retaliation, he employed a race of Indian breed to destroy the Englishman, and burn up his property, which they accomplished with fidelity.

After setting fire to the mill and killing the Englishman, the clerk, who was a German, sought to escape, and when hotly pursued, fled to a wooden cross on the road, and they literally cut him to pieces while clinging to it. The General was afterwards imprisoned for a while and released, and it is said the country had to satisfy Great Britain by the payment of $200,000.
